About the Speaker

Dr. Maan Barua is a University Lecturer in Human Geography at the University of Cambridge, and a research affiliate of the Oxford India Centre for Sustainable Development. His research is situated within environmental and cultural geography, the central axis of which focuses on the spatialities, politics and governance of the living and material world. It conceptually develops two of geography's vibrant sub-fields - more-than-human geography and political ecology - with which he has engaged through his doctoral and postdoctoral research. Dr. Maan Barua teaches environmental and human geography at both undergraduate and postgraduate levels.
